To Whom it May Concern,

My name is Cayleigh Leishman, I'm a student at Brigham Young University of Idaho working to get my software engineering degree. During my time at BYUI. I'm writing to share my enthusiasm to work for a place such as yours. I worked with various programming languages such as Java, python and C#. I also developed a passion for front-end development and working towards accessible UI design. I believe that working with your company will help me achieve my goal of developing strong coding skills. .

During my time at Brigham Young University, I've worked on multiple projects that strengthened my coding skills. One of my most valuable experiences was getting the chance to make a small website for a Quilter to showcase the different quilts that the owner worked on. During that time, I grew to understand the significance of color coordination for accessible design as well as the benefits of enabling Javascript.

While I got plenty of experience gaining technical skills I also got to develop essential people skills such as communicating effectively and boosting morale. Through collaboration, I've come to realize that though I will not know everything upfront, every challenge is an opportunity for growth. Ensuring communication is well understood and being willing to speak up at the right moment can help bring the team closer to the same page.

My interest in front-end development is driven by my experiences using the internet and my passion for accessible standards. I believe I can bring a unique perspective by advocating for accessibility standards within your company. This commitment for high-quality accessible design can help the company reach a larger target audience, which aligns with your company goals, while I continue to develop coding skills as well as experience in the workforce.

I would love to gain experience through your company. And hope we can connect soon to discuss my qualifications.

Sincerely

Cayleigh Leishman
